

Through working together ICPs aim to improve how local services are designed and co-ordinated for the benefit of patients and service users in local communities.

They are charged with delivering more integrated care for frail older people and those with specific long-term conditions, such as respiratory disease, diabetes, and stroke. They also work to prevent hospital admission by identifying patients most at risk and proactively work across health and social care to develop strategies to manage their health and social care needs.